Dear (name of HOD)

Website wording

Recent feedback from a number of employers and their graduate trainees indicates that the wording on university websites, which describes the accreditation status of their programmes, is sometimes confusing and inconsistent. Consequently, the JBM has developed some standard wording that universities are recommended to use on their websites and in their publicity material to describe the accredited status of their various degree programmes.

This approved wording is outlined in Appendix A. To monitor the implementation of this accreditation wording on your website and in your UCAS entry, it will now be one of the items checked by members of the JBM during the accreditation visit.

As you may know, all universities are required to include an employability statement on the UCAS website and you may wish to incorporate these statements given in Appendix A into that wording.

If you have any queries please contact me via the JBM secretariat by email to:-
jbm@ice.org.uk.

Yours sincerely,

Each section includes a title, which is the JBM title for each section. The wording should be implemented for written materials for 2012 entry and on electronic media for 2011 entry.

Historically, on occasions, the JBM has referred to 'partial accreditation'. This term is no longer appropriate and has therefore been avoided, reference being made instead to the qualification being partial.

The wording below is consistent with EC descriptors that have been agreed for use on the UCAS website by universities and are outlined in Section A for reference.
